Our analysis of public records, media reports, and community insights reveals several key details about Explained Pakistan. Below is a collection of compiled notes and technical insights:

In 1947, the British Raj was partitioned into two independent states, India and Pakistan. This event, known as the Partition of India, led to the creation of the Dominion of India and the Dominion of Pakistan. The partition was based on religious demographics, with Muslims forming the majority in the western part of the region and Hindus forming the majority in the eastern part. The resulting border between the two states was highly contentious and led to widespread violence and displacement of millions of people.
